

FIFTEEN AUGUST, TWO THOUSAND TWENTY-SIX

Happy Anniversary Yasi

*F*ifteen years ago I sent a message to a girl I had never met. Ten years ago you finally stood in front of me, and I understood what all that talking had been for.

Six years ago today, in a small garden in a very quiet summer, you married me anyway.

Between those days we crossed an ocean, learned a whole country from the beginning, and turned two into four. Liam has your stubbornness. Leo has your laugh. I have the better end of every deal we have ever made.

I made you something this year. It is all of it — the first days in Tehran, the airport, the wedding, the boys — in the order it happened, so you can walk back through ten years in a few minutes.

Scan the square below. Turn your sound on first.

Yours, always —
